

Rhode Island Disability Law Center Names New Executive Director

The Rhode Island Disability Law Center (RIDLC) is pleased to announce, after an extensive search, that Morna Murray has been named its new Executive Director. Morna brings executive experience in federal and state government, as well as non-profit leadership, with a focus on intellectual and developmental disability policies and programs, advocacy, and funding. Recently providing strategic consulting services for agencies advocating for children and adults with disabilities, Morna was previously Commissioner of the Connecticut Department of Developmental Services; President and CEO of the Connecticut Community Providers Association; and Senior Counsel to U.S. Senator Robert P. Casey, Jr., among other leadership roles.

“We are thrilled to have Morna on board as we also gratefully acknowledge the many years of service and commitment that Raymond Bandusky has provided the Rhode Island Disability Law Center,” said Raymond Marcaccio, Chair of the RIDLC Board. “We look forward to strong leadership and collaboration with the community as we all work hard to gain even greater rights and protections for people with disabilities.”

Morna has nearly 30 years of experience in legal, government, and nonprofit arenas, served on numerous boards and commissions, and published extensively on policy issues including poverty, children’s health, health care reform, and disabilities. She earned a Bachelor of Arts in Political Science and International Affairs from George Washington University, and a Juris Doctor degree from George Washington University National Law Center.